Probation conditions ignored at Omaha

MISSILE PROTESTOR JAILED

THE first missile base protestor at Omaha to violate his probation conditions was arrested on July 10 by the US Marshal, who handcuffed and shackled him.

He was 22-year-old Karl Meyer, founder of the Chicago Catholic Worker House of Hospitality and son of Congressman William Meyer of Vermont.

Karl Meyer, a member of Omaha Action—the American radical pacifist project against nuclear missile policy—had the previous day been given a suspended sentence of six months in jail and a $500 fine and had been placed on probation for one year for trespassing on the Mead inter-continental ballistic missile site near Omaha, Nebraska.

He had “broken” his probation conditions—which he had never accepted—by returning to the Omaha Action group at the entrance to the missile site.

Karl Meyer has now started to serve his original sentence.

Also arrested on July 10 for trespassing on the site were Hiram Holdridge and Larry Shumm. Bail was set at $2,500 each; for the seven trespassers previously arrested

GAITSKELL AND NATO

By Alan Lovell

THE Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament by its very nature was bound to make fundamental changes in the political climate of this country. As a result of the renewed debate in the trade unions and the Labour Party, we are now seeing two such changes taking place.

These changes are:

1. For the first time since the immediate post-war years, the whole question of the value of the Atlantic Alliance is being openly discussed. For at least the last ten years, discussion of this subject has been taboo.
2. The future of the Labour Party is now being seriously questioned. For too long it has been assumed that the Labour Party would go on for ever. Now it becomes clearer every day that there must be a new grouping of the radical forces in this country.

When Mr. Bevan says that the debate on the Bomb is going on inside the Labour Party, what he is in fact saying is that the important political divisions in this country are not between the Labour and Conservative Parties but between both the orthodox parties and the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and similar radical groups.

Both these questions have been discussed by the leading Left-wing weeklies recently. In a long editorial last week, The New Statesman considered how the Labour Party could be best united to face the Tories in the coming election. At the same time, Michael Foot, the editor of Tribune produced an article on the Labour Party and the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance.

Some weeks ago, the New Statesman had an editorial called “Second thoughts on the Bomb.” Looking at this title, one assumed that it referred to the Labour Party’s new non-nuclear club policy. But having read this editorial and last week’s, it now becomes clear that the second thoughts apply to the New Statesman. The New Statesman’s thesis is that if Mr. Gaitskell will only stress the positive aspects of his new policy, all the people who the New Statesman calls “the young idealists of the Labour Movement,” will come in behind him to fight the Tories.

Anybody who has any knowledge of the young people who have supported the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament will know how fantastic this idea is. It is not only that the Labour Party policy is completely unsatisfactory, but also the thoroughly unpleasant way in which it was reached. People are not now going quietly to forget Labour’s sudden change when the Municipal and General Workers’ Union for against nuclear missile policy—had the previous day been given a suspended sentence of six months in jail and a $500 fine and had been placed on probation for one year for trespassing on the Mead inter-continental ballistic missile site near Omaha, Nebraska.

He had “broken” his probation conditions—which he had never accepted—by returning to the Omaha Action group at the entrance to the missile site.

Karl Meyer has now started to serve his original sentence.

Also arrested on July 10 for trespassing on the site were Hiram Holdridge and Larry Shumm. Bail was set at $2,500 each; for the seven trespassers previously arrested in the action it had been set at $1,000 each.

Federal Judge Richard E. Robinson apparently became more severe than when he had set lower bail and given the maximum suspended sentences.

Commenting on the use of shackles on Karl Meyer, Omaha Action states:

“The US Marshal deals professionally with criminals who frequently resort to violence in escape attempts, and has had little experience with those who practice civil disobedience in a spirit of love and non-violence.

“To the Marshal, Karl Meyer was a criminal and could not be trusted.

“We hope Government officials will realise that shows of force and acts which appear to degrade other men are inappropriate and unwise in dealing with members of Omaha Action, and will only serve to rouse support and sympathy for those who are arrested.”

Letter to Eisenhower

In a letter to President Eisenhower, A. J. Muste, Co-ordinator of Omaha Action, set out the reasons of the group for asking to be admitted to the missile site.

“We feel called,” he wrote, “to speak with our fellows who are building the missile base at the point where our Government is carrying out this crucial part of a nuclear military programme, which we believe to be both profoundly evil and practically suicidal.

“There is another and more fundamental reason why we wish to enter the site and will attempt to do so, if our request is refused, though this would presumably be an act of civil disobedience.

“The great stretch of land which is being used for military purposes at Mead belongs, in the final analysis, to God, as does the entire earth. Man did not create the land. It was given to him as a heritage to use for the production of food and clothing and shelter, and that he might enjoy its beauty.

“... We do not believe that our nation has any right to engage in preparations for mass destruction by nuclear weapons or to hold the threat of such destruction over the people of other countries, to make ‘the women and children and noncombatants of of another country,’ as Mr. George F. Kennan recently put it ‘the hostages for the conduct of their government.’

“The fact that our own people are similarly threatened by the Soviet Union only means that in this nuclear missile race we are preparing our own destruction as well. The whole policy, on the part of every nation engaged in it, is mad as well as evil.

“Therefore, we cannot recognise the right of the Government to take over, directly or indirectly, more and more land and equipment of all kinds for mass destruction. . . .

“All those who use the land for evil purposes, whether deliberately or otherwise, are the invaders, not we as we enter the missile site.

“We bear no malice toward anyone. We do not arrogate any moral superiority to ourselves. We contemplate no use of violence under any circumstances and no resort to subterfuge. We are driven to act on the Truth as we see it. Somehow we hope that what is most truly human in us may speak to what is most truly human in our fellows.”

Disgusted by job on missile base —worker quits

ANOTHER building worker has left his job on the Polebrook missile base site near Peterborough. He is Tom Godfrey, of Peterborough, who was employed on the site for about two weeks before he became disgusted with the nature of the work and quit last week.

Several other building workers left the site early in July as the result of an intensive campaign by the Peterborough Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament group.

The Direct Action Committee, which is carrying on activity against the Northants-Leicestershire rocket bases, is assisting Mr. Godfrey from their Relief Fund until he finds other employment.

Trade union and local Labour Party support for the campaign in the Northants-Leicestershire area has been strong, as it has too in the Suffolk campaign, where the Woodbridge Trades Council has promised help.

A discussion took place last week among those who are taking part in the Polebrook campaign as to future activity. Volunteers who are needed for both the Direct Action Committee campaigns should contact the Committee at 344, Seven Sisters Rd., London, N.4. (STAMford Hill 7062.)

it now becomes clear that the second thoughts apply to the New Statesman. The New Statesman's thesis is that if Mr. Gaitskell will only stress the positive aspects of his new policy, all the people who the New Statesman calls “the young idealists of the Labour Movement,” will come in behind him to fight the Tories.

Anybody who has any knowledge of the young people who have supported the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament will know how fantastic this idea is. It is not only that the Labour Party policy is completely unsatisfactory, but also the thoroughly unpleasant way in which it was reached. People are not now going quietly to forget Labour's sudden change when the Municipal and General Workers voted for unilateral nuclear disarmament, nor are they going to forget the recalc conference of the Municipal and General Workers Union which is to take place at the end of July.

Second thoughts

The New Statesman may think that Mr. Gaitskell “has put himself across to the general public as a man of decision who refuses to be browbeaten by even the strongest trade union boss.” Anybody who has followed events at all for the last two months must surely see Mr. Gaitskell coming across as an unscrupulous politician who is prepared to go a long way in order to keep his position and his beloved H-bomb.

It is easy to see why it is necessary for The New Statesman to have second thoughts. Seeing the Labour Party as the only instrument for implementing the policies it thinks worthwhile it is desperately looking for a way of making the Labour Party an effective challenger for power at the next election. Once you think this is absolutely necessary, you land in some very curious positions.

Michael Foot's thesis is that we should not be seduced into an argument about NATO but should be content to point to the contradictions between Labour Party policy and NATO strategy.

NATO is not just an organisation for the so-called defence of the Western world. It is also an alliance of reactionary governments like Germany, France and Portugal, an alliance of Western imperialist powers, who as in the case of the French H-tests in the Sahara pay very little attention to the health and safety of African nations.

Any policy which aimed to make a decisive change in the world situation must begin with leaving NATO as fast as possible.

A SECRET ARMY FOR NATO

The following extracts are from "The Secret Army," an article by a Canadian Army officer, Captain D. J. Goodspeed, which originally appeared in the General Military Review for October, 1957. The extracts are here reproduced from last month's issue of Liberation.

THE two tragic periods of fighting which highlighted the recent revolt in Hungary have again focussed attention on a type of military operation which in the past has perhaps been too much neglected.

What happened in Hungary was the spontaneous uprising of an oppressed people and, from the purely military point of view, the action demonstrated all the weaknesses inherent in its origin. On the Hungarian side there was no hierarchy of leadership, no chain of command, no overall plan, no co-ordination of effort, and no logistical support.

Had there been a recognised leadership, a previously worked-out plan, and a staff to implement decisions and co-ordinate operations, there can be no doubt that the whole rebellion would have had a very different history.

Now the ways in which an established government may be violently overthrown and a new one substituted fall naturally into three categories, which are the revolution, the civil war, and the coup d'état.

Alternative violence

The coup is, above all else, the result of careful planning under a competent leadership. It is indeed the most aesthetically satisfying, as well as the most humane, of all military operations, for it achieves the same type of objective as does a war or a revolution without the clumsy necessity of prolonged campaigning.

At least in the recent past too little military thought has been given to the technicalities of the coup d'état.

In many ways this neglect would appear to be unfortunate, for it is possible that the coup d'état will play an increasing rôle in military calculations in the future. As conventional war becomes more and more costly and uncertain, it becomes less and less satisfactory as the classic "continuation of policy by other means" which Clausewitz believed it to be.

Yet only the most optimistic can hope that violent solutions to political problems will therefore be abandoned. It is more probable surely that there will be a search for alternative methods of violence, and of these the coup is by all standards the most worthy of consideration.

for the termination of this third phase, for there is probably a sense in which this task is never finally completed since one of the continuing commitments of all governments is self-perpetuation.

Provocative actions

There can be no doubt that the first, or Preparatory Phase, is by far the most difficult, the most dangerous, and the most uncertain.

Certain guides from past experience, however, may be useful. In the first place it is probably safe to say that insurgent leaders should endeavour to ensure that public opinion is inflamed against the government prior to the coup. Carefully selected acts should be performed which will provoke an official reaction, and this reaction should be presented to the public in the worst possible light.

There is probably no better way of achieving this aim than by a judicious assassination or two, preferably in those districts which are most apathetic to the insurgent cause.

Security, of course, is of paramount importance. If the existing regime has foreknowledge of the plot, it commonly possesses enough power to crush it utterly. One of the as yet unexplained phenomena of human existence is the consistent readiness of people to obey an established authority, and even that government which, if overthrown, would be execrated by the entire population will normally be able to rally enough support to defeat the insurgents, providing only that it can act in time.

Some security system which will ruthlessly eliminate treasonous or unreliable elements is patently necessary and it is as obviously desirable that the government's intelligence service should be penetrated at as high a level as possible.

Cell system

The use of a cell system, at least in the broadcasting stations should be drawn up well in advance and the general public from the very inception of the coup should be kept informed, not necessarily of what is actually going on, but at least of what the rebels wish them to believe.

The object of this, of course, is to influence the public to those courses of action desired by the insurgents, and it is not therefore necessary that the broadcasts correspond to the real situation. If the coup goes well, the announcements will be generally accurate; if it goes badly, or if the timetable cannot be kept, the false news can confuse and harm only the government supporters. In any case, in the heat of the action only an insignificant number of individuals will be able to contradict these reports from personal observation.

The overall aim of the Attack Phase is, by sudden violence, to confuse, bewilder, and throw into disorder the entire portion of the government machinery which might offer effective resistance, and to replace this as soon as possible with a working alternative.

The first two hours

Time is the one commodity which the rebels cannot afford to waste. Everything probably depends on the first two hours. Government communication networks must be disabled and government supporters must be completely terrorised from the outset.

In this the insurgents should be utterly ruthless. Casualties which would be prohibitive over any extended period are well spent if success is gained quickly, and while it lasts the coup should reach a veritable crescendo of fury.

In cases where the Attack Phase is complicated by the presence of foreign troops who might support the government it is absolutely essential that the nation's armed forces are, from the outset, wholeheartedly on the rebel side. Even when these conditions prevail, however, every endeavour short of hopelessly compromising the strategic position should be made to prevent an engagement between the occupying forces and the patriot army.

If by guile or deception, or even better by subversion and treason within the foreign forces, so much as a few hours can be gained, this time will almost always

COMMENT

Democracy in contempt

LEADERS of the National Union of General and Municipal Workers have decided to recall the Union's annual delegate conference to discuss the recent joint policy statement by the Labour Party and the Trade Union Council on nuclear weapons. It was against the advice of these leaders that the Union's annual conference recently passed a resolution calling for unilateral nuclear disarmament by Britain.

The official reason for the Union's recall, that the Conference was not able to discuss earlier the new Labour Party policy, is of course monstrous. The "non-nuclear club" theory was not suddenly born last month; and in passing a motion for nuclear renunciation the General and Municipal Workers were rejecting all such plans as that to retain nuclear weapons until all the second-rate Powers agree to abandon them.

The Union's leadership is determined to bring the Conference back into line behind Labour Party policy; and in this it will probably succeed. But August 21 will be a black day for democracy in British trade unions.

A move in a similar direction was Mr. Gaitskell's recent speech in which he argued that ultimately Labour policy was not decided by the Party's annual conference but by a Labour Government. Conference decisions, therefore, were not final and binding.

It is moves such as these that reveal the tremendous contempt in which the opinions of ordinary people are held by the Labour Establishment. If the traditional machinery of democratic institutions is manipulated in this way so that the orthodox means of political expression of mere citizens are effectively blocked, the validity of the whole conventional theory of democratic progress is called into question.

The secret army

A STRIKING example of military propaganda appears in this issue in Captain Goodspeed's article on "The Secret Army." To the layman it is unbelievable propaganda, but for military theoreticians it is of course their daily fare; indeed, there is a terrible realism about the need for planning a successful coup d'état once such nicalities of the coup d'état.

In many ways this neglect would appear to be unfortunate, for it is possible that the coup d'état will play an increasing rôle in military calculations in the future. As conventional war becomes more and more costly and uncertain, it becomes less and less satisfactory as the classic "continuation of policy by other means" which Clausewitz believed it to be.

Yet only the most optimistic can hope that violent solutions to political problems will therefore be abandoned. It is more probable surely that there will be a search for alternative methods of violence, and of these the coup is by all standards the most worthy of consideration.

Nor is there any reason why the free world's interest in this problem should be restricted solely to its defensive aspects. Recently indeed the coup has been used almost exclusively by totalitarian powers to extend their control over neighbouring states, yet the facts of the case would seem to indicate that dictatorships are inherently more vulnerable to the coup d'état than are democracies.

In military terms the successful coup d'état may be divided into three distinct phases, and we may conveniently call these the Preparatory Phase, the Attack Phase, and the Consolidation Phase. It will often be impossible to fix a definite point in time ness of people to obey an established authority, and even that government which, if overthrown, would be execrated by the entire population will normally be able to rally enough support to defeat the insurgents, providing only that it can act in time.

Some security system which will ruthlessly eliminate treasonous or unreliable elements is patently necessary and it is as obviously desirable that the government's intelligence service should be penetrated at as high a level as possible.

Cell system

The use of a cell system, at least in the lower echelons of the conspiracy, is almost certainly mandatory, and the employment of a special section to rescue captured members or to eliminate those who are in danger of revealing vital information will generally prove an unpleasant necessity. In this, as in all other operations in a coup d'état, casualties must be expected and accepted.

Liaison between Main and Tactical Headquarters inevitably involves border crossing which, although difficult, is certainly not impossible, as the history of the last ten years in Europe conclusively proves.

Obviously it is not possible to establish in advance what the precise military objectives of a coup d'état should be. Those personalities who are the heart of the government must, of course, be neutralised, but very careful thought must go into the drawing up of this proscription list. If the coup is successful, the rounding up of government supporters can continue well into the Consolidation Phase, so it is therefore only necessary to neutralise in the Attack Phase those whose freedom would actually hinder that phase.

The neutralisation of government leaders may be achieved in one of two ways, either by death or by capture. Of these death is generally the easier and the more reliable as it is certainly the more final.

The buildings to be actually occupied will generally be senior government offices (including the Parliament House, if such an institution exists and is in session), police headquarters, especially those of the secret police, military headquarters unless—as is devoutly to be hoped—these are already on the rebel side, and radio and television stations.

A previously prepared programme of newscasts and announcements for the while it lasts the coup should reach a veritable crescendo of fury.

In cases where the Attack Phase is complicated by the presence of foreign troops who might support the government it is absolutely essential that the nation's armed forces are, from the outset, wholeheartedly on the rebel side. Even when these conditions prevail, however, every endeavour short of hopelessly compromising the strategic position should be made to prevent an engagement between the occupying forces and the patriot army.

If by guile or deception, or even better by subversion and treason within the foreign forces, so much as a few hours can be gained, this time will almost always work to the rebel's advantage.

Even after a successful coup it is probable that a considerable degree of chaos will prevail for some time. Fortunately, except in those cases where the aim of the coup is the establishment of a military dictatorship, two different sets of revolutionaries will normally be involved, for in coups d'état, just as in more conventional forms of warfare, it is certainly desirable that there should be a clear-cut distinction between the responsibilities of the politicians and those of the soldiers.

The need to convince

The politicians who have been put in power by the coup must strive during the Consolidation Phase to convince the general public that the new government is deserving of effective support. They must also try to convey this same idea to the governments of friendly neighbouring states, and indeed to the world at large.

The military portion of the Consolidation Phase falls naturally into two parts, and the chief decision of the supreme commander is at what time and with what proportion of his forces he should abandon the one and press forward with the other. These two portions of the Consolidation Phase are the Pursuit and the Mobilisation.

It is, of course, extremely important that all government supporters should be rooted out and disposed of without delay, and it is probably better to err on the side of ferocity in such an operation.

Ideally this is the time for the employment of the supreme commander's operational reserve. The more rapidly these troops can control the avenues of escape, the richer the harvest is likely to be.

political expression of mere citizens are effectively blocked, the validity of the whole conventional theory of democratic progress is called into question.

The secret army

A STRIKING example of military propaganda appears in this issue in Captain Goodspeed's article on "The Secret Army." To the layman it is unbelievable propaganda, but for military theoreticians it is of course their daily fare; indeed, there is a terrible realism about the need for planning a successful coup d'état once such methods are entertained as legitimate.

We publish this article as a reminder that militarism dictates its own values, and that it is not only the militarists of "the enemy" who make such bloodthirsty remarks. This is the price all people pay for war preparations.

Captain Goodspeed's article first appeared in 1957 in the General Military Review, which is published in France under the sponsorship of the leading military figures in NATO and its member countries. At that time we wrote to the appropriate office in Whitehall and to the publishers in France in an attempt to obtain a copy. The fact that neither letter was even acknowledged is an indication of the pride that these military gentlemen take in their work.

There is no doubt that if the general public were aware that the sort of considerations which Captain Goodspeed discusses are in fact the way that their fate is being prepared, people would not tolerate all the nonsense about "defending freedom" that is trotted out with hypocritical regularity.

The freedom that the world needs is freedom from such sickening preparations. The next time the people whom Professor G. J. Renier calls "outsized men" seek to comfort us with NATO or the Warsaw Pact, we should remember "guile, deception, subversion and treason" and the proscription list for neutralisation.

TWO VIEWS ON LABOUR'S NON-NUCLEAR CLUB

PEACE NEWS, July 24, 1959—3

The Labour Peace Fellowship and the Political Committee of the London Co-operative Society have issued the following statements concerning the British Labour Party and nuclear weapons:

THE Labour Peace Fellowship welcomes the controversy on nuclear weapons now proceeding in the Labour and trade union movement. We are convinced that the joint declaration of the Labour Party and TUC—The Next Step—issued on June 24 is inadequate.

The decisions of the NUG & MW and the Chemical Workers' Union, which we support, called for an end to British reliance on all nuclear weapons. This, we believe, is the only policy that is compatible with Labour's socialist principles and should be the basis of Labour's approach to this problem. It would offer the electorate a real alternative to the Tory policy of British deterrents and the Liberal policy of sheltering under the US H-bomb.

We support as a first step a non-nuclear club with Britain taking the lead to discourage other nations from testing and manufacturing nuclear weapons. Britain can only sponsor this, however, if she ceases to rely on all nuclear weapons herself. Unilateral action has already been proposed by Labour in regard to nuclear tests. This should now be extended to cover both possession and manufacture. Also the bases in Britain, from which US bombs and missiles can be launched, should be closed down.

Labour must not be deterred from pursuing sane policies because of Britain's membership of NATO. We are convinced that the continuation of all the military blocs, which grew during the Stalinist era, and "cold war" are a hindrance to world-wide disarmament and prevent the United Nations playing its true rôle as the main instrument of world peace to which all nations should give their first allegiance.

European non-nuclear zone

Labour is already committed to support the creation of an area of disengagement in Central Europe and backs the Rapacki Plan for a non-nuclear zone. This policy would involve drastic changes in NATO strategy in any case. We would like to see Labour advocating a non-nuclear zone to cover the whole of Europe including Britain.

Whilst we believe, on moral and strategic grounds, that unilateral action by Britain to end the perils of the nuclear arms race is a priority, we realise that war itself and all weapons of mass destruction must be abandoned as instruments of policy. Military power politics are out of date. Labour's domestic programme cannot be fulfilled without drastic cuts in Britain's arms expenditure.

No policy today is without great risks, but the Labour Peace Fellowship believes that the risks of disarmament should be preferred by Labour to the risks of mass suicide. Resources would be released to enable Britain to lead an attack on world poverty and give generous aid to the poorer countries of the world. Britain together with India could pioneer a new Commonwealth policy to end the cold war and the armaments race.

We believe that Britain under a Labour Government could take the lead, but an essential first step is to cease being an expendable H-bomb and rocket base and abandon the present "defence" policy which offers no real defence at all.

Labour's wrong approach

THE Political Committee of the London Co-operative Society welcomes the joint Labour Party and TUC statement, "Disarmament and Nuclear War—The Next Step," as indicating a readiness on the part of the Labour Party and the TUC to re-examine their position in regard to the nuclear peril in the light of present circumstances.

We regret, however, that this re-examination still proceeds from the assumption that a settlement of world problems must be based upon a nuclear deterrent policy. We believe this approach to be fundamentally wrong, and that it cannot be sustained on either moral, political or economic grounds.

The statement's proposals for multilateral disarmament have our wholehearted support, but we are satisfied that the possibility of their achievement will not be improved, indeed may even be retarded, by the implementation of the conditional offer for a British initiative to form a Non-Nuclear Club.

A British initiative in the form of an unequivocal declaration that we ourselves renounce the manufacture, use and testing of nuclear weapons would have a far more decisive effect in mobilising world public opinion for a multilateral disarmament agreement along the lines proposed in the policy declaration.

We are also concerned at the statement's clear indication that even if agreement were reached among all the nations of the world, excepting the USA and the USSR, not to manufacture nuclear weapons, Britain would still allow American bases to remain on her territory. The presence of these bases contributes to international tension. For the same moral, political and strategic reasons which motivate our opposition to British manufacture, storing and testing of nuclear weapons, we are opposed to the continuance of American bases on our soil.

Those who hold our views are faced by a political task. We must convince the Co-operative, Labour and TU Movement, and the electorate, that our view is right.

We believe that only through a Labour Government can any advance towards disarmament be achieved.

Spanish students on trial

From Christopher Sames

NINE Spanish students were arrested on May 13 for distributing leaflets calling for a 24-hour pacific strike in Madrid. They are Alonso Novo, Vincente Garcia, Vincente Lluch, Fernando Mena Alvarez, Cesar Cundelville, Salvador Franco, Tomas Llorens, Isabel Munoz and Emilio Sanz.

During interrogations following the arrests one of the students Alonso Novo nearly died from the beatings he received.

Their trial began a week ago before a military court consisting of five army officers. The prosecution demanded 12-year sentences for all those arrested except Alonso Novo and Tomas Llorens for whom a 16-year sentence was demanded and Isabel Munoz for whom a 6-year sentence is being asked. None of the accused were allowed to have lawyers of their own choice and were given instead two military lawyers.

An observer has been sent from England to the trial and to the trial of Julio Ceron, an official in the Spanish Foreign Office and a representative at the International Labour Organisation until he was recalled to Spain and arrested.

THROUGH the War

Resisters International the PPU takes its place in the world-wide pacifist fellowship. The International Council of the WRI has just finished its annual meeting in Brussels. Some of its members have gone on to hold talks with the E. German Peace Council in Berlin, after which two of us will be speaking for the first time at a series of meetings in E. Germany. Three members of PYAG have been given grants from the Maurice Rowntree Fund to help them go to the WRI Youth Conference in Germany.

Next month the PPU will be represented at the Annual Conference of the International Liaison Committee of Peace Organisations.

I am sure that you will agree that pacifists must not be insular and that it is right for the PPU to take an active part in the ever-growing pacifist movement elsewhere. That is why we send £100 each year to the WRI and also send our representatives abroad. You can help to find the necessary money by your contribution to the PPU Headquarters Fund, which is behind at the moment and therefore needs a good lift up this week.

STUART MORRIS.

General Secretary.

To date our total is £480.

But our aim for the year is £1,250.

Please help to bridge the gap.

Donations to the Peace Pledge Union, which are used for the work of the PPU, should be sent marked "Headquarters Fund," to the PPU Treasurer at Dick Sheppard House, Endsleigh St., London, W.C.1.

Oliver Caldecott reviews

Civil Liberty in South Africa, by E. H. Brookes and J. B. Macaulay. OUP, 18s.

IT must be about ten years ago that I organised in Cape Town the first large public protest meeting against the Nationalist Government's legislative programme, a meeting which led to the formation of the Civil Rights League out of which emerged, some years later, the South African Liberal Party.

Dr. Brookes, joint author of this excellent book, was a leading figure in all these enterprises, a VIP of South African liberalism, and a man with whom I am proud to have been associated. Not that I always agree with him. Indeed, South African liberalism has its decidedly paternalistic side and Dr. Brookes is one of its spokesmen. He is honest, sincere, courageous and out of date, one of the white 'old guard' of the radical tradition: its "new men" in South Africa are uncompromising, militant, revolutionary and . . . black.

All this has a bearing upon Dr. Brookes' and Mr. Macaulay's book. Firstly because they trace in their detailed yet readable narrative the diminution in South African liberties since the days when a few of us foresaw what the new Nationalist Government intended and, Cassandra-like, uttered ominous warnings which the nation chose to ignore. They state correctly that "it must not be imagined that the restrictions on civil liberty began in 1948 or are the monopoly of one political party," yet they know, too, that in the decade since then the pace and intensity of the attacks upon civil liberties have drastically increased, especially in four fields—"the Church, the University, the sanctity of freehold title to land, and the special position of the police force."

The other way in which my opening comments are relevant is this: "Civil Liberty in South Africa" is written from certain carefully nurtured and preserved presuppositions which are, in the modern world of power politics, almost as archaic as the mediæval ideal of chivalry in Oxford Circus at rush hour. These presuppositions are explicitly underlined with quotations from Dicey and Jennings and St. Thomas; the "new men" look to Marx and Gandhi. Brookes and Macaulay believe in the "rule of law"; the "new men" in the seizure of power.

I hasten to add that such archaism is not wholly distasteful to me. How comfortable to share this faith in constitutionalist Christianity—and yet how uncomfortable to find one's enemies (the white Nationalists) spurning it and one's allies (the black Nationalists) ridiculing it!

But I must, in conclusion, pay tribute to this book: all the facts are here—how the police state has grown its formidable apparatus of oppression and how religious, economic, social, intellectual and political rights have been curtailed.

This is a necessary volume in the literature of modern South Africa, and a monument to a tradition of rational, civilised politics that has, alas, departed with the hansom cab.

Monday Conference

Places are still available at the Peace Pledge Union's holiday conference at Borth, North Wales. Facing a sandy bathing beach, the conference centre offers all the amenities of a good hotel and children are specially welcome. "You will be free to make your own arrangements during the day and every evening you will be able to join in discussions of interest to pacifists and their friends," says a brochure available from 6 Endsleigh Street, London, W.C.1. The subject is "Some Aspects of Non-violence," led by John Aitkenhead and Stuart Morris. Fees: Adults, £8 10s.; Children: Under 5, £3 15s.; 5-10, £5 15s.; 10-12, £6 15s. The date is . . .

A blind spot

By Sybil Morrison

Man's greatest achievements have been the work of some obscure man or handful of men with faith in themselves, helping mankind against mankind's stubborn opposition . . . one man with courage makes a majority.—Clarence K. Streit. "Union Now."

LAST week a Memorial to Christabel Pankhurst was unveiled by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Kilmer; there, in the shadow of the House of Lords, which at long last has opened its obstinately closed doors to women, a concourse of men and women were gathered to do honour to one who had defied the law and suffered the consequences, in order to bring the cause of women's emancipation to public notice.

The Victoria Tower Gardens were gay with the purple, green and white banners of the past; Dame Ethyl Smythe's resounding "March of the Women" awakened echoes of feet marching, paradoxically, to prison and to freedom.

Lord Kilmer spoke of the long years of "stubborn opposition" to women's demand for freedom and justice, and of the blind spot that sometimes assails the most intelligent and rational of politicians and statesmen, which caused so many of them to obstruct for so long, this struggle for the vote.

Yet, he pointed out, in the end, what seemed impossible turned out to be not only possible, but entirely acceptable. Just for a moment he touched on his wondering thought that there might, perhaps, even to-day, be other causes, equally rational and necessary, that were obstructed and

NUCLEAR ARMS FOR JAPAN?

DOUBTS have been cast upon statements which appeared in the British Press in February to the effect that Japan had totally renounced nuclear weapons.

Prime Minister Kishi said last year on several occasions that Japan would not equip the "self-defence" forces with nuclear weapons.

He further declared on February 9 this year that Japan renounced such weapons even for defence and would not have them on her soil.

However, because of the intended revision of the Japan-US Security Treaty, fears have been expressed by the Japanese Council Against Atom and Hydrogen Bombs that a large scale build-up of the defence forces leading to the supply of nuclear weapons to the "self-defence" forces is in the offing. These fears were given added substance in March by statements in the Japanese Diet that American Honest John rockets already in Japanese possession were to be equipped with nuclear warheads.

On March 18, Shigejiro Ino, former Defence Agency Director General, pointed out at a Cabinet meeting of the House of Representatives that "... nuclear warheads have been made much smaller nowadays, as in the case of warheads for Honest Johns . . . it is not unconstitutional for Japan to possess such defensive weapons as Honest Johns."

Questioned about the nature of these warheads, Ino replied first that they were about one-eighth and then that they were about one-quarter the power of the A-bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

In reply to a question on March 19, Mr. Kishi stated at a session of the Budget Committee of the House of Councillors:

"We do not interpret Article 9 of the Constitution to mean that the introduction of atomic and hydrogen bombs is prohibited under any circumstances. Foreign forces are stationed in Japan under the security treaty. Naturally these foreign forces have the right to belligerency, and land, maritime and aerial potential, as Article 9 of the Japanese Constitution is not applied to them."

During the questions which followed Foreign Minister Aichihiro Fujiyama said that Japanese "self-defence" forces would act in co-operation with US forces on Japanese soil if Japan were invaded or if it were thought invasion was likely.

Japanese sympathy for A-bomb pilot

A LETTER of sympathy was sent recently by "Yuwa Kai," Japanese affiliate of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, to US Major Claude Eatherly, the pilot of the plane that dropped the A-bomb on Hiroshima.

A sense of guilt has haunted Major Eatherly who helped to kill over 100,000 at Hiroshima. Since the bombing he has turned to drink and become involved in a number of attempted robberies. He once attempted suicide, and during the last ten years has had several breakdowns and been repeatedly in hospital undergoing psychiatric treatment. He received the letter from Yuwa Kai while in the Veterans Administration Hospital in Waco, Texas.

The Japanese Christians of Yuwa Kai wrote:

"With this letter comes to you our warm sympathy and earnest prayer that you recover speedily. . . We wish you to know that we regard you as a victim of war in much the same way as those who were injured in the war, and are praying for your complete recovery and that the day shall come when you will join the forces of good will, forgiving any wrongs of the past on either part, and work for establishing a peaceful world, a world of reconciliation and love."

Following Major Eatherly's participation in post-war atomic bomb tests his wife has had two miscarriages of malformed fetuses, and it has been discovered that many of her husband's sperm cells have become deformed. In 1950 and 1954, babies born to the Eatherlys had blood diseases which have been attributed to Eatherly's exposure to radiation from the bombs he had dropped.

Signatories to the letter, which was delivered by Mrs. Linger, a Vice-Chairman of the American Fellowship of Reconciliation, included Iwao Ayusawa, Chairman of Yuwa Kai and Professor of International Relations at the International Christian University in Tokyo, and the following members of Yuwa Kai: Executive Secretary Paul M. Sekiya, Treasurer Hideyo Seki, Hatsue Monomiya and Bunichi Kajami.

The full text of the letter and other details appear in the American For magazine Fellowship. Box 271, Nyack, New York.

Omaha discipline

THE following is the opening statement of the Omaha Action discipline, the basis on which members joined the project:

Omaha Action is carried on by persons deeply concerned with peace and their own responsibility in a world preparing for a nuclear war. Through all we say and do we wish to express our inner conviction that humanity is indivisible and that peace can only come through the power of truth and love. We hope

Lord Kilmuir spoke of the long years of "stubborn opposition" to women's demand for freedom and justice, and of the blind spot that sometimes assails the most intelligent and rational of politicians and statesmen, which caused so many of them to obstruct for so long, this struggle for the vote.

Yet, he pointed out, in the end, what seemed impossible turned out to be not only possible, but entirely acceptable. Just for a moment he touched on his wondering thought that there might, perhaps, even to-day, be other causes, equally rational and necessary, that were obstructed and opposed by a congenital blind spot in the minds of the leaders of the world.

A solitary "Hear! hear" rang out; and I will leave my readers to guess whose voice that might have been!

It requires very little intelligence to know that a nuclear war, whether it is started by the East, or by the West, must end in total disaster for the whole human race. In spite of that knowledge, it seems that statesmen, trade union leaders and politicians of all parties, are wilfully blind to the facts; they reiterate a promise that Britain will never use the bomb first, when they know perfectly well that there is small chance of survival for this island if ever it is used against us; they obstinately refuse to see that if war should come Britain must use it first, or perish.

These weapons are the outcome of war; they belong to war, and they will be used in war; it is clear that the only real hope is to abandon war, and yet there is a blind spot that prevents the acceptance of this solution.

The pacifist movement is a tiny minority, and those who belong to it sometimes despair of its effectiveness; but to have faith in one's cause is basic to ultimate achievement, and confidence and courage are as good as a majority. The time is perhaps near when the impossible turns out to be not only possible but acceptable. Let us have faith!

Reconciliation Editor dead

PEACE NEWS regret to announce the death of the Rev. Glyn Lloyd Phelps on July 9. As editor of Reconciliation, the journal of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, he made a forthright and vigorous contribution to Christian pacifist thinking, achieving this despite a long period of ill health. A memorial service is to be arranged.

Omaha discipline

THE following is the opening statement of the Omaha Action discipline, the basis on which members joined the project:

Omaha Action is carried on by persons deeply concerned with peace and their own responsibility in a world preparing for a nuclear war. Through all we say and do we wish to express our inner conviction that humanity is indivisible and that peace can only come through the power of truth and love. We hope that our witness will speak to the minds and hearts of our fellows.

All action will be taken in the spirit of non-violence and of consideration for all men, appealing to the best in persons in order to win them to the non-violent way of life.

Omaha Action rejects and opposes all forms of totalitarianism, whether Communist, Fascist or any other.

We act as members of one human family and therefore in opposition to war preparation and war by any country.

We value democratic processes and wish them to be deepened and extended. In engaging in civil disobedience we believe ourselves to be exercising a democratic right and duty, namely, that of non-violent action against laws which violate conscience. Accordingly, we shall offer no resistance to law enforcement officers but act in the Gandhian spirit of accepting arrest and penalty, or possibly appealing to higher judicatories if we think that in this way democratic process can be strengthened or maintained.

Those who may engage in non-violent intervention will do so not in order physically to prevent people from doing what they believe they should do, but in order to try to convey to those who are engaged in making weapons of mass extermination the real meaning of what they are doing. Non-violent intervention will be intended also to convey the depth of our concern and sorrow over the evil of war and of a society built on violence in which we are also implicated, and to the transforming of which into a fraternal and peaceful society we wish utterly to dedicate ourselves.

In accord with Gandhian principles all action will be open and above board.

Probation conditions ignored at Omaha

MISSILE PROTESTOR JAILED

THE first missile base protestor at Omaha to violate his probation conditions was arrested on July 10 by the US Marshal, who handcuffed and shackled him.

He was 22-year-old Karl Meyer, founder of the Chicago Catholic Worker House of Hospitality and son of Congressman William Meyer of Vermont.

Karl Meyer, a member of Omaha Action—the American radical pacifist project against nuclear missile policy—had the previous day been given a suspended sentence of six months in jail and a $500 fine and had been placed on probation for one year for trespassing on the Mead inter-continental ballistic missile site near Omaha, Nebraska.

He had “broken” his probation conditions—which he had never accepted—by returning to the Omaha Action group at the entrance to the missile site.

Karl Meyer has now started to serve his original sentence.

Also arrested on July 10 for trespassing on the site were Hiram Holdridge and Larry Shumm. Bail was set at $2,500 each; for the seven trespassers previously arrested in the action it had been set at $1,000 each.

Federal Judge Richard E. Robinson apparently became more severe than when he had set lower bail and given the maximum suspended sentences.

Commenting on the use of shackles on Karl Meyer, Omaha Action states:

“The US Marshal deals professionally with criminals who frequently resort to violence in escape attempts, and has had little experience with those who practice civil disobedience in a spirit of love and non-violence.

“To the Marshal, Karl Meyer was a criminal and could not be trusted.

“We hope Government officials will realise that shows of force and acts which appear to degrade other men are inappropriate and unwise in dealing with members of Omaha Action, and will only serve to rouse support and sympathy for those who are arrested.”

Letter to Eisenhower

In a letter to President Eisenhower, A. J.

THE Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament by its very nature was bound to make fundamental changes in the political climate of this country. As a result of the renewed debate in the trade unions and the Labour Party, we are now seeing two such changes taking place.

These changes are:

1. For the first time since the immediate post-war years, the whole question of the value of the Atlantic Alliance is being openly discussed. For at least the last ten years, discussion of this subject has been taboo.
2. The future of the Labour Party is now being seriously questioned. For too long it has been assumed that the Labour Party would go on for ever. Now it becomes clearer every day that there must be a new grouping of the radical forces in this country.

When Mr. Bevan says that the debate on the Bomb is going on inside the Labour Party, what he is in fact saying is that the important political divisions in this country are not between the Labour and Conservative Parties but between both the orthodox parties and the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and similar radical groups.

Protestors at the entrance to the Mead inter-continental ballistic missile site near Omaha, Nebraska, on July 1. On the left, Karl Meyer and bearded Ross Anderson. A. J. Muste (with hat) addresses the military over the gate. Moments later all three climbed the gate and were arrested for trespass, as reported in PN last week.

to use for the production of food and clothing and shelter, and that he might enjoy its beauty.

“... We do not believe that our nation has any right to engage in preparations for mass destruction by nuclear weapons or to hold the threat of such destruction over the people of other countries, to make ‘the women and children and noncombatants of of another country,’ as Mr. George F. Kennan recently put it ‘the hostages for the conduct of their government.’

“The fact that our own people are similarly threatened by the Soviet Union only means that in this nuclear missile race we are preparing our own destruction as well. The whole policy, on the part of every nation engaged in it, is mad as well as evil.

Disgusted by job on missile base —worker quits

ANOTHER building worker has left his job on the Polebrook missile base site near Peterborough. He is Tom Godfrey, of Peterborough, who was employed on the site for about two weeks before he became disgusted with the nature of the work and quit last week.

Several other building workers left the site early in July as the result of an intensive campaign by the Peterborough

Both these questions have been discussed by the leading Left-wing weeklies recently. In a long editorial last week, The New Statesman considered how the Labour Party could be best united to face the Tories in the coming election. At the same time, Michael Foot, the editor of Tribune produced an article on the Labour Party and the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance.

Some weeks ago, the New Statesman had an editorial called “Second thoughts on the Bomb.” Looking at this title, one assumed that it referred to the Labour Party’s new non-nuclear club policy. But having read this editorial and last week’s, it now becomes clear that the second thoughts apply to the New Statesman. The New Statesman’s thesis is that if Mr. Gaitskell will only stress the positive aspects of his new policy, all the people who the New Statesman calls “the young idealists of the Labour Movement,” will come in behind him to fight the Tories.

Anybody who has any knowledge of the young people who have supported the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament will know how fantastic this idea is. It is not only that the Labour Party policy is completely unsatisfactory, but also the thoroughly unpleasant way in which it was reached. People are not now going quietly to forget Labour’s sudden change when the Municipal and General Workers voted for unilateral nuclear disarmament, nor are they going to forget the recalc conference of the Municipal and General Workers Union which is to take place at the end of July.

Second thoughts

The New Statesman may think that Mr. Gaitskell “has put himself across to the general public as a man of decision who refuses to be browbeaten by even the strongest trade union boss.” Anybody who has followed events at all for the last two months must surely see Mr. Gaitskell coming across as an unscrupulous politician who is prepared to go a long way in order to keep his position and his beloved H-bomb.

It is easy to see why it is necessary for The New Statesman to have second thoughts. Seeing the Labour Party as the only instrument for implementing the policies it thinks worthwhile it is desperately looking for a way of making the Labour Party an effective challenge for
